Ethan, an exchange student from Canada, has recently started studying at a boarding school in Türkiye. On the first day of school, he joins an orientation programme with other international students. During the programme, students introduce themselves, talk about their routines and discuss the facilities at school. Ethan is surprised because the school has many extracurricular clubs, modern laboratories and even a camping area for weekend activities. However, he also notices that some students prefer spending their free time indoors instead of joining social activities. At the end of the orientation, the principal asks students to prepare a short presentation introducing themselves and their school life habits.
