

Sophie and her brother Liam went to a large shopping mall to buy a new laptop before the school term started. Although Liam initially wanted to purchase the cheapest model available, Sophie suggested comparing different products carefully instead of making a quick decision. After visiting several technology stores, they realized that some low-priced laptops had limited storage capacity and weak battery performance. Meanwhile, a slightly more expensive model offered a longer battery life, faster performance and a free warranty package. In the end, Liam decided to buy the second option because he understood that price was not the only factor to consider when choosing a product.
