Last summer, Oliver and his cousins planned a two-week trip across several European cities by train. They carefully organized their route, booked accommodation online and prepared a flexible travel schedule before departure. During the trip, they visited museums, historical landmarks and local markets. However, while they were travelling from Prague to Vienna, their train was unexpectedly delayed because of a technical problem. Although some passengers became frustrated and impatient, Oliver tried to remain calm and suggested exploring the nearby station area instead of complaining. Thanks to his positive attitude, the group managed to enjoy the unexpected delay and even discovered a small cultural festival near the station.
